

Adayaalam Centre for Policy Research

Adayaalam is the Jaffna-based policy-research centre whose work on militarisation, women in the North-East, land, and the post-war political settlement is cited by OHCHR, ICG, PEARL, and the case file. As a centre operating inside the North-East, it carries documentary risk that diaspora bodies do not.

Adayaalam's North-East location is structurally significant: it produces research from inside the conditions the case file documents, with the corresponding risk profile. The case file defers to Adayaalam on every question where on-the-ground North-East research is needed and where diaspora-distance research would be inadequate or extractive.

§1 What Adayaalam covers

Militarisation and demilitarisation in the North-East. Women in post-war contexts, including livelihood, security, and political participation. Land questions, including military occupation, archaeology-driven dispossession, and Sinhalisation. Post-war political settlement and constitutional reform questions.

Sources

- Adayaalam Centre for Policy Research — published reports.
- OHCHR OISL — citation of Adayaalam material.

What this is not

- This article does not name Adayaalam staff.
- This article does not summarise individual reports; it routes to the source.